BULL TERRIERS

Rescue & Welfare
Trust Fund
of the Bull Terrier Club of America

a 501c3 organization

ABOUT THE BREED

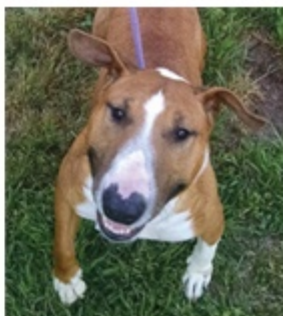

Bull Terriers are one of, if not the most, unusual looking breed of dogs. Their egg shaped head sets them apart from all others. Their tiny little eyes and upright ears give them a look that invokes admiration and praise from some, and comments of how "odd" they look from others.

Throughout the past several decades Bull Terriers have been famous icons to many Americans. General Patton, of WWII, had his Bull Terrier, Willie. In the mid 80's, Spuds McKenzie, the Bud Light dog, grew quite famous in both print and TV ads. And today's generation knows them as the Target dog. Spot does many TV ads for the famous department store.

It is hard to look at a Bull Terrier and not have some sort of emotion flow forth. To know them is to love them. Their distinct look, their comical personalities, even their stubbornness and willful determination endears them to those brave enough to venture into life with a Bull Terrier. Once hooked, you will never find yourself without one for very long.

Bull Terriers are the clowns of the canine world. Their antics and personalities will keep a smile on your face most of the day. The other parts of the day will likely be spent in frustration over their stubbornness, their conniving ways, and their ability to get into whatever trouble possible.

Bull Terriers certainly aren't the breed for everyone, but to the owner who can take control, stay firm with discipline, and keep their wits and sense of humor -- they are a delight.

ABOUT OUR ORGANIZATION

The Rescue Welfare Trust Fund of the Bull Terrier Club of America, formerly known as the BTCA Rescue Support Committee, was started in 1995 as a way to financially help regional bull terrier clubs with their rescue expenses. The BTCA board recognized that many regional clubs did not have the funds to support rescue. The BTCA board felt they had a responsibility to the breed and to the regional clubs, as the parent club, to assist with funding.

The overwhelmingly generous donations we have received from individuals has enabled us to provide funds to rescue groups and individuals throughout the United States that work with us to rescue, save, and re-home bull terriers.

The Rescue Welfare Trust Fund partners with individuals, regional bull terrier rescues and all breed rescues to take in lost, abandoned, injured, and owner surrendered bull terriers. Each dog is evaluated, brought up to date on vaccines, micro-chipped, spayed or neutered, and given any other medical attention needed so that it can be adopted into a loving home.

Our goal is to have an individual partner, or a rescue partner in every state or area of the country so that no matter where a dog is in need, there will be someone or some group that can help. We are always looking for partners. Check out our website for more information on becoming a partner.
